produced airplanes, ships, and weapons. San Francisco served as a major port for ships carrying troops to the Pacific. Many people came to California during the war, and the populations of the Los Angeles, San Diego, and San Francisco areas grew considerably.

During the war, Japanese-Americans were moved from California to relocation camps. This was a terrible injustice to a group of innocent Americans.

Throughout the 1950s, California continued to grow at a rapid rate. California became the number one state in population when it passed New York in 1963. During the 1960s, California's population grew to over 1,600 people a day. California has become our nation's center for research and design.

Contributing to the vitality of the state have been the men and women of diverse ethnic backgrounds. The talents and energies of our Chinese-Americans, Japanese-Americans, Native Americans, Blacks, Hispanics and Latinos (California's largest minority), and many other national ethnic groups have blessed California with an interesting, talented, and resourceful population.

California Constitutions & Capitals

The Constitution of 1849 is a compilation of parts of other states' constitutions. The convention members creating the state constitution included 38 delegates who had been citizens of 21 different states and 14 lawyers of 11 states. Twenty of the state constitutions and the federal constitution were mentioned in the debates, some of them several times. Much of the first California Constitution was based heavily on the constitutions of Iowa and New York.

The territorial government adopted California's first constitution in 1849 and adopted it on September 9, 1850, during statehood. This constitution served the state both before and after its admission into the Union. The present constitution was adopted in 1879. It has been amended (changed) over 500 times.

Since 1849, California has had its capital in five different cities: San Jose, Vallejo, Benicia, San Francisco, and Sacramento, the capital for over 39 million California residents. California has the largest state population.

Organization of State Government

From studying the U.S. Constitution, you know certain responsibilities are left to the states. To carry out these responsibilities, states have established their own constitutions. The state government, for example, is responsible for highway construction, local laws, intrastate commerce, traffic laws, education, marriage and divorce laws, voting regulations, etc.

The organization of a state government is very similar to that of the federal government. Both have three branches, which have about the same type of duties and the same type of checks-and-balances system. Article 3 of the California Constitution reads:

"The powers of state government are legislative, executive, and judicial. Persons charged with the exercise of one power may not exercise either of the others except as permitted by this Constitution."

Both the U.S. Constitution and the California Constitution also have a Bill (or Declaration) of Rights. There are other similarities and differences you will notice as you read about the California Constitution. Read Article 4 and the 10th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution if you wish to know exactly what the federal Constitution says about the role of the states.

QUESTIONS

TRUE OR FALSE? Write a T or F in the space provided.

- ___ 1. California has the largest state population.
- ___ 2. The concepts from many state constitutions helped create the California Constitution.
- ___ 3. The recorded history of California goes back to the 1500s.
- ___ 4. The current capital of California is Sacramento.
- ___ 5. California's present constitution was adopted in 1849.

Article XIX - Motor Vehicle Revenues

Article XIX explains that fuel taxes shall be used to construct and maintain roads and highways along with public mass transit systems.

Article XX - Miscellaneous Subjects

Article XX covers various subjects ranging from provisions specific to the County of Sacramento to the regulations surrounding alcoholic beverages.

Article XXI - Redistricting

Because of shifting populations, the boundaries of the Senate, Assembly, Congressional, and Board of Equalization districts must be periodically adjusted to ensure voter equality in representation. The adjustment of these districts, known as redistricting, is mandatory per Article XXI.

Article XXII - Architectural & Eng. Services

Article XXII was added to the California Constitution in November 2000, when Proposition 35 was approved by the state's voters. This allowed the governmental entities of California to contract with qualified private companies for architectural and engineering services for all public works projects.

There are no Articles XXIII through XXXIII of the California Constitution.

Article XXXIV - Public Housing Project Law

Article XXXIV requires local voter approval of housing projects intended for low-income people that receive funding or assistance from the federal and/or state government. Throughout its 70 years of enactment, this article has been constitutionally challenged at the state level and limited in scope by judicial decisions.

Article XXXV - Medical Research

Article XXXV was added to the state constitution in 2004 when Proposition 71, the Stem Cell Research Initiative, was approved. This gave the state the right to conduct stem cell research, creating and funding the California Institute for Regenerative Medicine (CIRM).

State Constitution vs. U.S. Constitution

Initially, state constitutions were short and brief. Today the 50 state constitutions average about 30,000 words. In comparison, the United States Constitution has 7,591 words (including the 27 amendments). State constitutions are longer because they have many details. It is easy for these to become outdated. Remember that the U.S. Constitution leaves the details to the lawmakers in Congress and the courts. This makes the U.S. Constitution very flexible, and state constitutions often inflexible.

“The judicial power of this State is vested in the Supreme Court, courts of appeal, and superior courts, all of which are courts of record.” — California Constitution Article VI

The judicial branch of government in California administers justice and interprets the laws. It encompasses the California court system and serves as a check against legislative and executive powers by making sure that these branches do not create laws that are in conflict with the state constitution. The judicial branch is responsible for seeing that laws are justly and equitably applied in all matters brought before the courts.

The California court system is the largest in the nation, with more than 2,000 judicial officers, 19,000 court employees, with over 9.5 million cases filed annually. The state constitution provides the judicial power of California through the superior courts, courts of appeal, and Supreme Court.

Criminal and Civil Cases

All courts handle both criminal and civil cases. A criminal case involves a violation of a law for which there is a fine or other penalty like a prison sentence or probation. Criminal cases range from relatively minor offenses such as traffic infractions to serious ones such as robbery or murder. These typical crimes are classified as felonies, misdemeanors, or infractions.

Felonies – Serious crimes that often are punishable by a state prison sentence, or even death in the most extreme cases.

Misdemeanors – A lesser offense than a felony. It is punishable by fine or incarceration for less than a year in a city or county jail rather than in a state penitentiary.

Infractions – These are not punishable by jail or prison time but rather by a fine. The most common infractions are traffic violations.

Civil cases are brought against individuals or organizations by other individuals or organizations. In some civil cases, the plaintiff seeks money damages to be paid by the defendant. In other kinds of civil cases, the parties ask the court to take a certain action, such as to dissolve a marriage, decide the custody of minor children, review property rights, or stop someone from doing something.

Now that you are familiar with the type of court cases, it is time to learn more about the courts themselves. California has two types of state courts, 1) trial courts (or superior courts) and 2) appellate courts, consisting of the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court.

Superior (or Trial) Courts

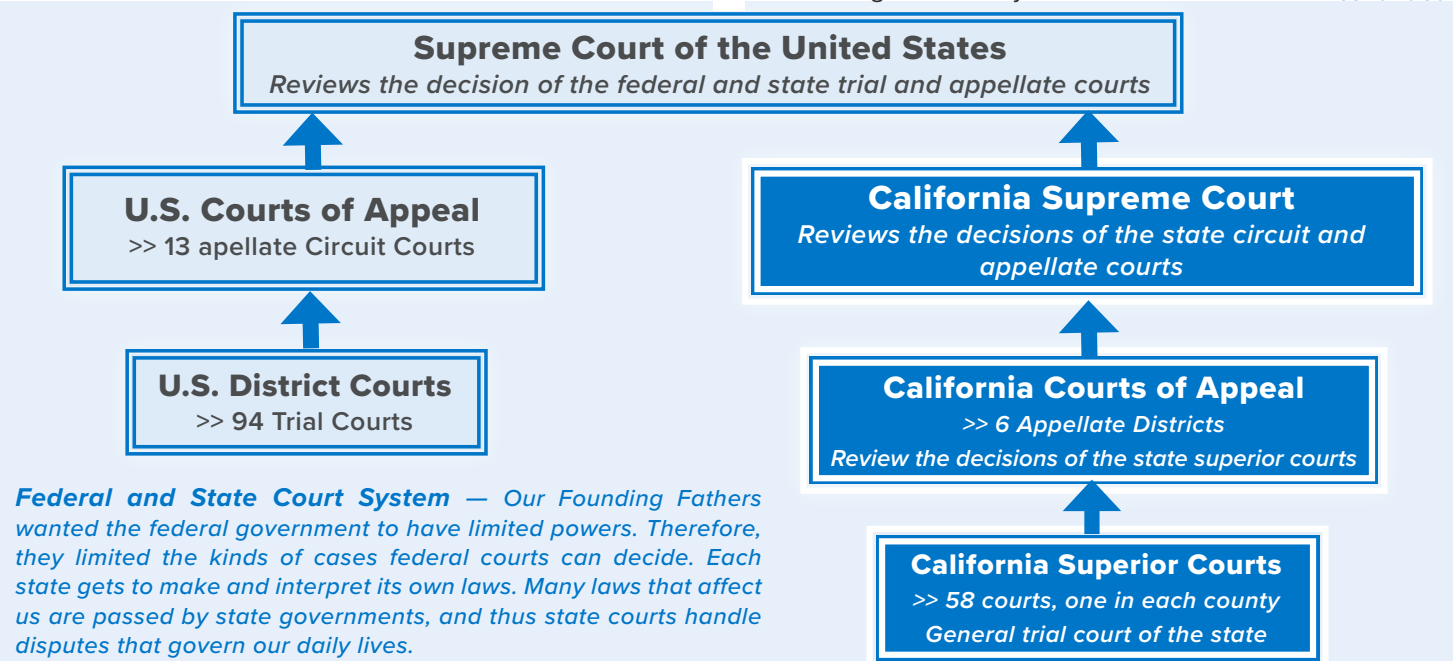

California has 58 superior courts, one in each county. In trial courts, a judge and sometimes a jury hear witnesses’ testimony and other evidence and decide cases by applying the relevant law to the relevant facts.

Before June 1998, California’s trial courts consisted of superior and municipal courts, each with its jurisdiction and number of judges fixed by the Legislature. In June 1998, California voters approved Proposition 220, a constitutional amendment that permitted the judges in each county to merge their superior and municipal courts into a “unified,” or single, superior court.

Superior courts have trial jurisdiction over all criminal and civil cases. Special departments of the courts handle family, probate, mental health, juvenile, small claims, and traffic cases. Many superior courts also have specialty departments for nonviolent drug offenses and domestic violence cases. These courts will hear over 5.9 million cases in a typical year, making a final determination in 4.2 million.

Today, there are approximately 1,754 judges in the trial court system. Trial court judges are chosen by the voters and serve six-year terms. As with the other California judges, they are elected on a non-partisan (no party affiliation) basis at general elections. A superior court judge must have been an attorney admitted to practice law in California or have served as a judge of a court of record in this state for at least 10 years. The state Legislature determines the number of judges in each court, ranging from two in sparsely populated counties to more than 400 in Los Angeles County.

Federal and State Court System — Our Founding Fathers wanted the federal government to have limited powers. Therefore, they limited the kinds of cases federal courts can decide. Each state gets to make and interpret its own laws. Many laws that affect us are passed by state governments, and thus state courts handle disputes that govern our daily lives.

California History

- I. California has had five capitals since it was first organized.
 - A. San Jose
 - B. Vallejo
 - C. Benicia
 - D. San Francisco
 - E. Sacramento (current capital)
- II. There have been two California Constitutions:
 - A. 1849 - First constitution adopted by the territorial government.
 - B. 1879 - Currently in effect with numerous amendments.

The Three Branches of California Constitutional Government

- I. California Constitution is longer than, but similar to, the federal Constitution; can be changed by amendment.
- II. California Constitution provides the basic form and operation of state and local government; must not conflict with the federal Constitution or with authority given to the federal government.
- III. There are three branches of California government:
 - A. Legislative Branch, Article IV
 1. Main duty is to make laws
 2. Main body is the Legislature
 - A. The Legislature consists of two houses:
 1. The Senate
 - a. 40 members, one from each of the 40 senatorial districts
 - b. Qualifications: 18 years old, a U.S. citizen, resident of the district for one year, resident of California for three years preceding election
 - c. Your local state senator is _____.
 - d. Term: four years, half of the members are elected every two years, three-term limit
 - e. Powers: pass bills and send to Assembly, select impeachment jury, approve governor's appointments
 - f. Officers: lieutenant governor serves as president of Senate, president pro tempore
